Accreditation is the result of a process that assesses the quality of a program, measuring it against agreed upon standards. It assures that the program meets the standards. The standards have generally been developed by professionals within the discipline and are intended to reflect what a person needs to know and be able to do to function successfully within that profession. Accreditation within health-related disciplines also serves a very important public interest. Along with certification and licensure, accreditation is a tool intended to help assure a well prepared and qualified workforce providing health care services.

In accordance with CoAEMSP disclosure requirements, the Fresno County Department of Public Health Paramedic Program reports the following information on its students for the year of 2022:
