Starting a new drug court is the most significant outcome in this reporting period. A new treatment court program was implemented in September 2015 after Proposition 47 dissolved the previous drug court model. While a few drug court participants chose to remain in recovery after the passage of Prop 47, the referendum took away the incentive for the majority of new participants to enter drug court and reduced most drug charges from felonies that carried two or more year sentences in state prison to misdemeanors with short or no local jail time. Faced with the choice of minor sentences or 12 to 18 month court programs with rigorous, life-changing requirements, very few defendants opted for drug court. Beyond that, many drug defendants were unconcerned about misdemeanor charges and did not take court proceeding seriously. The failures to appear (FTA) rate for misdemeanor drug cases spiked to 60 percent in October 2015. Large numbers of FTAs expend more justice system resources and delay the onset of services and rehabilitation for the missing defendants.

An innovative drug court model was conceptualized and implemented through the collaboration between the Department of Behavioral Health (DBH), criminal justice, law enforcement, treatment organizations, and the Fresno Superior Court. The new drug court features a number of significant changes aimed at marketing the benefits of engaging in recovery, streamlining the drug court process, and placing defendants who enter drug court into treatment quickly. Law enforcement agencies and the District Attorney's Office worked on reducing the time between drug citations and the first court appearance from 90 days to 30 days. This then decreased the FTA rate from 60 to 45 percent by March 2016. The court and the DBH arranged to have Substance Abuse Specialists (SASes) available at the courthouse each morning to meet with drug defendants before their arraignments. The SASes educate defendants on the health and social benefits of engaging in substance abuse recovery, and assess the defendants' addictions and personal circumstances to determine which treatment programs would best meet their needs, should they accept treatment. Immediately after meeting with the SASes, misdemeanor and felony defendants who are eligible to enter drug court are now arraigned in Department 11 by the drug court judge. Just after the new drug court started in Fall 2015, approximately 64 percent of eligible defendants accepted treatment. By March 2016, 94 percent of defendants facing the decision to enter drug court did so.

The drug court is immediately able to refer these defendants to suitable treatment providers based on the SASes' assessments and recommendations. An electronic dashboard was developed in FY 2015-16 that helps the judge and probation officers identify the outpatient and inpatient treatment providers that are suitable for individual participants and have available treatment slots open for immediate referrals.

Since its inception in September 2015 through June 2016, the adult criminal drug court convenes four mornings each week, sees an average of 10 to 12 participants daily, and held over 1500 individual hearings. In total, the drug court served 697 participants in this reporting period; of those, 118 successfully completed the drug court program and 197 were terminated unsuccessfully. The drug court's successful completion rate is currently 37 percent and the retention rate is 71.7 percent.

The DBH-funded part time Adult Drug Court Service Coordinator provided the services listed below.
